

Hello from your Principal

Dear NYP Learners

Hello there.

My name is Russell, and today marks my first day as your new Principal.

Though new to NYP, I have looked after the engineering school in another polytechnic, so I am familiar with what most of you will go through during these years earning your diploma.

I intend to continue our focus on you, your education and your experience, to ensure that you have a good foundation to find success later in work and life. NYP will also continue to make sure there are good opportunities – like real work stints, a system of CCAs and study trips, projects – so you can grow your skills like leadership, innovativeness and being resourceful.

I am also keen on looking at how NYP can better define our sustainability journey, and whether all of us can do more and participate in programmes to build a more inclusive NYP.

I am confident that you'll find your second family and build your own story here – whether in pursuing academic success, growing your interests at our many CCAs, or coming up with innovative solutions to the various industry projects or internships that you'll get to work on.

I'm also looking forward to meeting more of you over the coming months, to hear about your NYP story.

Your Principal,

Russell Chan
